

Brenda O'Sullivan and her son, Ben, in the kitchen of their Tarnet home.

PICTURE: KEN IRWIN

Life's a breeze down on Sustainability Street

SUSTAINABILITY is a major concern for Brenda O'Sullivan, husband Dale and their two sons, who have moved into their new home at Villawood Properties' Seasons Estate at Tarnet in Melbourne's west.

"This is the way to live," Brenda says. "Our previous home had a big garden and we spent all our spare time looking after it. It used a huge amount of water – that's not on any more.

"We like the open spaces here, the barbecue area, the tennis courts, the water saving.

"I think this is the way town planning has to go in the future. Our home is pretty well exactly what we want. A lot of thought has gone into this neighbourhood."

Villawood has developed a specific guide showing how to conserve energy and has incorporated a program called Sustainability Street, backed by the State Government.